Transgressing Hartford's Color Line: The Life of Painter Charles Ethan Porter

February 4, 6:00 p.m., Hartford History Center

In 1847, Hartford's Charles Ethan Porter was born into a working class African American family, excelled in public school and gained an ever-widening reputation as a gifted artist. On the verge of greatness in the mid-1880s, his fortunes took a sudden turn, and the last decades of his career were marked by increasing decline and eventually poverty until his death in 1923.

To what degree was Porter's failure attributable to race prejudice in Hartford at the time? A presentation by Craig Hotchkiss will explore the known facts of Porter's life within the broader social context of Gilded Age Hartford.

FALL ARTS & CULTURAL EVENTS

Maurice Robertson Exhibits Expressions in Sounds and Motion at ArtWalk January 22-March 4, 2016

Hartford photographer Maurice Robertson explores the meditative qualities and the outward, flowing dynamism of musicians at play. His photo work is a love affair with jazz music and the quest for displaying the energy of performance of this art form.

Warm up to The Big Read!

Hartford Public Library will be uniting the community around a single work of literature: "The Grapes of Wrath", a 1940 Pulitzer Prize winning novel by John Steinbeck. In the coming months, Steinbeck and "The Grapes of Wrath" will be celebrated, discussed, and most importantly read throughout the city. The Big Read, which officially starts in March, will include a kickoff event, theatrical performances, film screenings, bread-making and food preservation workshops, and other memorable programs.

A place like no other.
